Drug program 'to protect our community'

By Lisa Gervais

With 15 opioid-related deaths in Haliburton County between 2019-2023, it's hoped a new County of Haliburton program can reduce overdose harms across the Highlands.

The County has secured a nearly $1.2 million federal government grant to offer outreach to vulnerable populations.

Haliburton County Paramedic Service director, Michael Slatter, and director of community outreach, Sue Tiffin, spoke about the successful federal grant application at an April 22 County council meeting.

It's for a substance use and addictions program emergency treatment fund (ETF).

They said $1,176,390 has been approved towards eligible expenditures, including an outreach van, safety equipment, medical supplies, and staffing support and training, during the fiscal year 2026-2027. The start is backdated to April 1.

Sustainability of the program from April 1, 2027 and onward will rely on budgetary approval by County council.

Slatter said Haliburton County currently has a collaborative community mobile outreach program "within which this project can build on."

Tiffin added that, according to Lakelands Public Health, the region has experienced a higher hospitalization rate for drug poisoning than the provincial average, with fentanyl involved in 86 per cent of opioid-related deaths in 2023.

'Mobile outreach programs are essential in filling service gaps'

"Although Haliburton County reported fewer deaths in 2024 compared to previous years, the unpredictability and toxicity of the unregulated drug supply continue to pose a significant threat to community health." She mentioned the 15 opioid-related deaths in the County from 2019-2023, according to Lakelands Public Health, in a joint written report with Slatter.

Slatter said the crisis is compounded by geographic isolation, limited access to health care services, and social stigma, all discouraging people from seeking help and making it difficult to deliver timely interventions.

In 2022, the County relied on a single addictions' worker. Since June 2023, it's built a larger outreach program with numerous partners offering on-site support with community paramedicine services, harm reduction services, income tax, heat and hydro programs, housing and homelessness services, literacy and employment programs, support with food insecurity, and mental health and addiction services.

Slatter said, "the idea is we'll still continue with the clinics that are run regularly throughout the County, but add a mobile component. The idea is to reach vulnerable populations throughout the County as a whole, seven days a week.

"The idea is to attend in locations where people who use drugs might congregate. The team would be available to follow up with people who have had an event whether they go to the hospital or not. The goal is to bring services to them and provide care and support in their environment."

County staffer Sue Tiffin. File.

Acute need

Tiffin said research from the Wellington Guelph drug strategy highlights that mobile outreach programs are essential in filling service gaps, especially in remote areas. She added these programs provide low-barrier access to harm reduction supplies, health services, and peer support, often reaching individuals who are disconnected from traditional health-care systems.

By deploying a unit in all weather, Haliburton County Paramedic Services, "will be able to reach individuals of all ages where they are, provide culturally-safe and trauma-informed care, and reduce overdose-related harms in a timely and effective manner," Tiffin said.

They'll draw on the experience of other municipalities running a similar service. Tiffin and Slatter said they'll get help from the University of Western Ontario Centre for Education Research & Innovation (CERI). The centre has experience in doing research on outreach programs, including the Supportive Outreach Services (SOS) program operated by Grey County. That program offers a range of life-saving interventions, such as overdose reversal, mental health support, addiction support services, distribution of naloxone and other harm reduction items.

Naloxone is a fast-acting, life-saving medication used to temporarily reverse opioid overdoses. It works within minutes, restoring breathing, and is available as a nasal spray or injection, often without a prescription.

CAO Gary Dyke said it was a significant achievement for the County and its partner municipalities. Slatter said they were one of 10 successful applicants from 400.

Coun. Bob Carter said he hoped funding can be secured as the program continues past the grant period. However, he said for now they were addressing an "unmet need both with drugs and mental health. This is going to be money well spent, and money that needs to be spent to protect our community."

Hospital CEO comes home

By Mike Baker

The new figurehead at Haliburton Highlands Health Services (HHHS), Jack Hutchison, said he intends to lean on the community to help identify pressing needs and future enhancements to local health care.

He started with the organization as president and CEO March 30. The past month has been spent getting up to speed with HHHS operations and refamiliarizing himself with a community he loves. Hutchison was raised in Minden and graduated from Hal High.

"This is very much a homecoming. My mom grew up here, our family moved to Minden when I was six, so this is where most of my earliest childhood memories were made," Hutchison said. "I didn't know when we'd be back, but we knew we wanted to return home someday."

His wife also grew up in Haliburton County. In 2019, despite working in Ontario's far north on the shores of James Bay, the couple bought a cottage in the area and have been returning for visits ever since. They were here last fall on vacation when Hutchison saw the posting for his new job.

Hutchison returns to the Highlands with more than a decade's experience in the health-care sector. He first joined the Weeneebayko Area Health Authority (WAHA) in 2014 as a human resources staffer, moving up the ranks to HR manager and vice president of HR and organizational development before landing the vice president of people, performance and clinical support role.

In 2022, he spent nine months with Headwaters Health Care Centre in Orangeville as its vice president of people and culture but returned to WAHA as its chief operating officer in January 2023.

Over the past three years he's had to navigate complex logistical challenges – of the six communities he was responsible for, four of them were fly-in only. One of those was located about 400 kilometres away from the WAHA main office.

"It taught me how important it is to be adaptable, to think on your feet and be innovative when you work in rural health care. One of the biggest pieces for me was ensuring that, no matter where someone is, that access to quality health care is the same for everyone. That's something I'll strive to maintain every day at HHHS," Hutchison said.

Doing more

With the Haliburton site seeing major investment over the past couple of years, after the addition of CT and mammography and expansion of X-ray services, Hutchison said he doesn't have a specific focus regarding new services just yet.

HHHS is still awaiting a decision from the province on plans to consolidate long-term care services in Minden, with an application to add 98 beds to Hyland Crest still pending. If approved, that would allow HHHS to repurpose Highland Wood long-term care in Haliburton.

New HHHS president and CEO, Jack Hutchison, said he jumped at the chance to return home to Haliburton County. Photo by Mike Baker.

"That area would be expanded for more acute care services for the County. We hope to add more beds… investigate what specialty services we could bring in on different days," Hutchison said.

Haliburton County is one of the poorest regions in Ontario and Hutchison said he also wanted to boost HHHS' social programs.

"We're a big geography, which provides challenges to some people. We work closely with our foundation to make sure people are fed, we have folks getting 12 free meals per month funded through HHHSF. We have patient transport so people can get from their home to appointments and group sessions. We have a big impact in the community that way and it's something I'd like to do more of."

Hutchison said there are plans for community town halls later this year to provide updates on HHHS' master planning process and to hear concerns from the public. He confirmed HHHS will have its annual general meeting in Minden June 25.

"I think anything we do [in terms of future improvements] has to be thoughtful and purposeful, really driven by the community and ensuring they meet the needs of our patients," he said.

New doc starting

The County of Haliburton, in partnership with Haliburton Highlands Family Health Organization (HHFHO) physicians practice, and Haliburton Highlands Health Services (HHHS), said Dr. Jeet George will be joining the HHFHO, as a primary health care provider, and HHHS, as of May 1.

Dr. George has broad expertise in general practice, emergency medicine, and procedural anaesthesia. He practiced medicine in the UK for eight years before relocating to Australia. He has been practicing a combination of family, emergency and GP anesthesia in Australia for the past 17 years.

Dr. George will be rostering 700 new patients in Haliburton County and has committed to providing medical services to the Highlands for six years.

Dr. George contacted staff in February 2025 in response to a job posting on the British Medical Journal website. He and his family travelled from Australia to visit Haliburton County and did a tour of medical facilities in August 2025.

''My family and I are beyond excited for this big move. This started from a response to a job advertisement a bit more than a year ago. Looking at the stunning area and surroundings, we had to visit; we were captivated and bowled over when we did. The steadfast support, provided by recruitment coordinator, Wendy Welch, and the local physicians and administration staff, was instrumental in making this happen. We are finally ready and look forward to being a part of this wonderful community," Dr. George said. (Lisa Gervais)

Community in mourning for 'spirit of Kinmount'

By Mike Baker

The Kinmount community is still reeling following the recent loss of one of its greatest champions.

Longtime teacher and historian, Guy Scott, died April 15 at age 70. The son of Betty and Bill Scott, Guy was the fifth generation of Scotts in Kinmount, along with his sister, Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock MPP Laurie Scott.

Laurie Scott told The Highlander during an April 27 interview that her brother had numerous health challenges over the past five years, but it was a recent sickness, that developed over about six weeks, that took him.

"Guy was Guy right until the end. I saw him about 12 hours before he passed, we had dinner together and he was still talking about his next project," Laurie said. "He was still uncovering new things he didn't know about the history of the area. He just loved that stuff. He never stopped, right up to his last day."

Seven years her elder, Laurie said Guy was always a great influence during her childhood. They spent a lot of time together on a family farm on Crystal Lake Road. As a teen, he coached her baseball team and was always quick to teach her about the family's rich history in the area.

As he got older, Guy's ties to Kinmount only strengthened. He had a lifelong love affair with the Kinmount Fair, where he was a two-time president. He also served as the provincial president of the Ontario Association of Agricultural Societies. Laurie said Guy, who was known as 'the spirit of Kinmount', inherited his enthusiasm for the fair from their father, seeing it as the ultimate celebration of community.

He served as editor of the Kinmount Gazette for many years and volunteered his time with the Trent Lakes Historical Society, Kinmount Artisans Guild, Haliburton Highlands Genealogical Group and the Kinmount Masonic Lodge. Guy also spent 10 years as a municipal councillor in the old Galway-Cavendish township that later amalgamated into Trent Lakes.

Not content to simply talk history, Guy made every effort to record it too. He wrote several books, including The History of Kinmount: A Community on the Fringe, The Story of the Kinmount Fair, and Where Duty Leads: The 109th Battalion in WWI that detailed his grandfather's experiences fighting in Europe.

Guy fought to preserve the community's railway station, which now serves as a museum, and has helped shed light on Kinmount's historic ties with Iceland. Through his research, Guy learned about a large group of new Canadians who arrived from Iceland in September 1874, to work on the Victoria railway line. The immigrants established Hayford, a ghost town along the Burnt River that Guy discovered and took many groups of Icelandic descendants to see after he wrote about it in his history of Kinmount.

Janice Stange, chair of the Trent Lakes Historical Society, said Guy's death has been a shock to everyone.

"He was our enthusiastic go-to for any stories and information from the past. Even in these days of technology, he was our link to classic north country history," Stange said. "We'll never be able to say enough about his contributions to the area and its history. It's a different world without him."

Laurie said her brother was a family man at heart – devoted to his wife, Lori, and their children. He'll also be remembered as a pioneer in digital education after serving for many years as a history and civics teacher with the Virtual Learning Centre.

It will be his many contributions to Kinmount that Guy will be most remembered for, Laurie said.

"He believed in this community – he used to say if you love the place you live enough, it becomes the centre of your universe. That describes how Guy felt about Kinmount," Laurie said. "I'll miss being able to pick up the phone and call him, because he usually had the answer to any question I had."

A celebration of life will be held at the Kinmount Fairgrounds Arena May 9, with visitation from noon and ceremony at 1:30 p.m.

Dysart to fix air quality at health centre

By Mike Baker

Dysart et al council has approved a near-$26,000 spend to fix airflow issues at the Haliburton Family Medical Centre, though staff have warned that may not completely solve the odour issues that have plagued the facility in recent months.

CAO Tamara Wilbee told council April 28 that engineering firm Pinchin investigated the site in March and found a shortfall in outdoor air ventilation supply to some units within the building. While mould wasn't a concern, Pinchin discovered elevated levels of carbon dioxide (CO_2) in 13 of 27 tested locations on the first floor – with some three times the standard amount. On the second floor, three of nine locations exhibited elevated levels of CO_2.

In its report, Pinchin stated the building's airflow system was likely contributing to the issue. When temperatures within units reach their set amounts, airflow is reduced meaning less outdoor air is brought into the building, which increases CO_2 levels.

The township hired Walker's Heating and Cooling to complete an air audit of the facility. Council approved the firm installing new HRV heating systems in the Haliburton Vision Care, Hill Chiropractic and Physiotherapy and LifeLabs space and the downstairs hallway for $23,913. Another $2,000 will be spent on electrical work.

Dysart is spending almost $26,000 addressing airflow issues at the Haliburton Family Medical Centre. File.

While the project wasn't included in the 2026 budget, treasurer Brayden Robinson said it could be pulled from the $45,000 council committed to putting into a medical centre reserve fund this year.

Most businesses at the centre have remained open, but LifeLabs has been closed since March 25. Wilbee said LifeLabs has written a letter to the township asking for updates.

"They want to know what we're doing to fix these problems," Wilbee said.

Mayor Murray Fearrey said he's heard from many Haliburton residents who are upset about the closure, forcing them to leave town for bloodwork. With the work still expected to take a couple of weeks to complete, the mayor asked if there was any other local facility LifeLabs could use in the interim. Councillors Nancy Wood-Roberts and Pat Casey suggested the legion.

"They need an area to do blood collection… they would need a chair, a fridge to put samples and that's about it. It doesn't have to be rocket science for a short-term stay," Wood-Roberts said.

Wilbee said a trailer could also be brought into the medical centre parking lot, though noted LifeLabs has not made any request.

The CAO also suggested council put out an RFP to complete a full excavation of three sides of the building to re-waterproof it. She said pooling groundwater, which has entered the rear of the building before, is contributing to the bad odour.

Casey said that would likely be an expensive fix and could take up to a month to complete. A full report on costing and project timelines will be presented at council's May 26 meeting.

MINDEN HILLS NEWS

Public access AED

A new public access automated external defibrillator (AED) unit has been installed in downtown Minden to help enhance community safety and emergency response.

The AED is located in the information kiosk across from the post office, making it easily accessible in a central, high-traffic area.

The unit was donated by Matt and Deborah Renda of Boshkung Brewing.

The township said their contribution "reflects a strong commitment to community well-being and public health."

An official unveiling will take place April 30 at 10 a.m., during a scheduled break in the council meeting. Members of council will be in attendance to recognize the installation and the donors' contribution. Traffic cones will be temporarily placed to block two parking spaces near the kiosk during the unveiling. There will be no road closures, and regular traffic flow will not be affected. Residents and visitors are encouraged to attend and learn more about the important lifesaving resource.

Consultation on crosswalk

Minden Hills wants feedback from area businesses, residents and the community about the proposed plan for a new pedestrian crosswalk on Bobcaygeon Road in the downtown.

The township is working with a consultant, Engage Engineering, which has developed the concept.

A webpage has been developed that provides details on the drawings along with a link to a report presented to the March 26 council meeting. Visit www.mindenhills.ca/pedestrian.

Director of public works, Mike Timmins, said, "the community is invited to review the conceptual drawings, details and to provide their questions and thoughts on this plan."

Feedback will be received until May 1; emailed to admin@mindenhills.ca.

Timmins added, "this feedback is valued and provides important information that will be used to report back to council on the public input received."

Virtual septic information

The municipality will host a virtual information session about the 2026 septic re-inspection program May 12 at 6:30 p.m.

Residents and property owners are invited to learn about program requirements, inspection schedules, and homeowner responsibilities for the upcoming season.

To participate, contact Claudia Krause at mhsrp@haliburtoncounty.ca for the meeting link and further details. The township website has information on the program and zone maps www.mindenhills.ca/septic-reinspection.

Nominations open May 1

The township said nomination forms for mayor, deputy mayor and councillors are now available at their office at 7 Milne St.

Nominations must be made on a prescribed form and include signatures of at least 25 electors within the municipality endorsing the nomination. School board trustees are excluded from the 25-signature requirement. Nomination forms are also available on the township website.

All nomination forms must be filed, either in-person or by an agent, with the returning officer during normal office hours between May 1 and Aug. 20, and between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. on Aug. 21.

The required filing fee for mayor is $200 and all other offices $100. Cash, debit, certified cheque, or money order made payable to the Township of Minden Hills must accompany the signed forms. Full details on the procedures to be followed can be obtained from the returning officer. The returning officer is Vicki Bull: 705-286-1260 ext. 585; toll free: 1-844-277-1260; email: elections@mindenhills.ca

There is also an English language school board trustee and a French language school board trustee to be elected.

Tackling drugs

By Lisa Gervais

Earlier this month, Lakelands Public Health issued an alert due to a notable increase in suspected drug poisonings in Northumberland County.

It's not the first time they have had to issue a warning for the health unit region.

In this case, they think it's fentanyl; appearing as a light brown colour, with a lighter colour inside. It may smell like motor oil prior to being heated and may have an unusual texture.

Due to the toxicity of the substance, they said more than one dose of naloxone may be required. Naloxone is a fast-acting, life-saving medication used to temporarily reverse opioid overdoses by binding to opioid receptors and blocking the effects of drugs such as fentanyl, heroin, and morphine. It works within minutes, restoring breathing, and is available as a nasal spray or injection, often without a prescription.

All drugs can cause an overdose, including street drugs, prescription medication, or over-the counter drugs. However, as more potent opioid and non-opioid substances are mixed, people who use unregulated drugs are continuously exposed to a toxic and unpredictable supply that can result in drug poisonings leading to serious injuries or death.

The problem is everywhere and Haliburton County is no exception.

Fifteen opioid-related deaths occurred in the Highlands between 2019-2023, according to the 2024 Lakelands Public Health drug strategy report. The crisis is compounded by geographic isolation, limited access to health care services, and social stigma, all discouraging people from seeking help and making it difficult to deliver timely interventions.

I've never come across someone I suspected was drug poisoned. I don't have a naloxone kit in my car or on my person. I'm not confident I would be able to respond with the care required to bring a person back to life.

So, I welcome the County of Haliburton and its Haliburton County Paramedic Services' new outreach program – thanks to a one-time grant of $1.2 million to buy a van, hire staff, and equipment to respond to drug poisonings and other crises 24/7. They got the money from the feds' Emergency Treatment Fund.

It's hard to believe that in 2022 there was only one addictions worker in the Highlands. But, since June 2023, the County has collaboratively built a community outreach program with numerous partners. They offer on-site support with community paramedic services; harm reduction services; income tax and heat and hydro programs; housing and homelessness services; literacy and employment programs; support with food insecurity, and mental health and addiction services.

Studies show people, by and large, don't think they'll get addicted to drugs and there is no risk of overdosing. However, people are using opioids without prescriptions and, in 2019, there were 251 cases of drug poisoning among the wider population.

The region has experienced a higher hospitalization rate for drug poisoning than the provincial average, with fentanyl involved in 86 per cent of opioid-related deaths in 2023. Although Haliburton County reported fewer deaths in 2024 compared to previous years, the unpredictability and toxicity of the unregulated drug supply continue to pose a significant threat to community health.

So, a mobile harm reduction service appears timely.

My only regret is that the feds are giving us one-time funding only. That funding will run out next spring, and it will be up to County taxpayers to shoulder the load – estimated at approximately $900,000 to Dec. 31, 2028.

At the risk of sounding like a broken record, when will the province of Ontario stop downloading services, such as mental health and addictions, to municipalities and actually step up and provide money. Mind you, it all comes from the same pocket – whether federal, provincial, or municipal – and that is yours and mine.

SAWDUST STORIES

Believe in tomorrow

By Darren Lum

My dad gives me perspective when it comes to monotony.

I don't know how my dad endured the Second World War, but I suspect he believed in tomorrow.

He saw terrible things and went hungry at times. At eight years old, his daily task after the war was to stand in line for a bag of rice to feed his family of 11. That kind of bleak existence would break most people, but he returned each day. In a country rebuilding, there wasn't much reason for hope. Now, near the end of his life, he's grateful for each day — a lesson in endurance.

Every job has its monotony. Left unchecked, it wears you down. Perspective is what keeps it in check.

Studies have linked optimism to lower rates of heart disease and even longer lifespans. Whether optimism causes those outcomes or simply is aligned with healthier habits isn't entirely clear, but the pattern is hard to ignore. A positive mindset isn't something we're born with. One method is to employ the best possible self practice, which showed an improvement after one session. Take five minutes a day to imagine the best possible future. My father never said this outright, but I doubt he was focused only on the present while standing in that line.

Nothing I do in construction compares to what he endured. Still, how I approach the work matters.

Painting dozens of spindles could have been a chore, but I treated it as a chance to improve. Did I complain at times? Sure. I'm human.

When purpose isn't obvious, I break the work into manageable goals, whether by the minute or hour. Training for a marathon taught me that 42.5 kilometres isn't conquered on race day. It's built over months. Runs in the rain, the snow, the sleet. And for me, the first step was always the hardest. Showing up, again and again, is what made the difference.

I've had a range of jobs since I left my 23-year career in journalism.

Writer and photographer, township employee tasked with helping tourists book campsites and canoes, dogsled guide and now construction.

In every role, the constant was me. I could focus on what wasn't working, or I could look for what was.

Sometimes, that meant standing at the Frost Centre with no bookings, taking in the breeze coming off St. Nora Lake. Other times, it meant showing up for the dogs and the clients, standing in the cold as the snow fell around me. The circumstances changed, but the choice didn't.

When I lose sight of that, I think of my dad as a boy standing in line, believing in tomorrow.

Transportation problems

Dear editor,

Deborah Watson had a point when she said there are no transportation options in the area.

The bus to Toronto is gone. There is no rail - unlike the Hwy. 11 corridor. High-speed rail might come to Peterborough, but with no local network; so what?

We need public transportation on Hwy. 35 to Lindsay and Peterborough. Service to Gravenhurst would connect to rail. If the province won't help, the four mayors need to collaborate to make it happen.

HUMANS OF HALIBURTON HIGHLANDS

Constantly reinventing her life

by Susan Tromanhauser

Reinvention is in Midori Nagai's blood.

While studying in Manchuria, China, Nagai's Japanese father was sent to Siberia, held as a prisoner of war. There, he developed a survivalist, entrepreneurial spirit, trading his skills in martial arts with the Soviet guards in exchange for food.

When he finally returned to his home in Japan, he no longer fit into the mold of homogenous Japanese business culture, so he took his education as a metallurgical engineer and immigrated to Toronto with his wife and two daughters.

Nagai, at the age of six with no English, began her new Canadian life. Nagai took lessons learned from her father and reinvented herself many times.

After graduation from Ontario College of Arts and Design University, Nagai spent her 20s travelling through Europe, living in Florence, and later spending time in Mexico. She also visited family in Japan, but eventually returned to Toronto to use her arts education and earn a living weaving tapestries and creating art installations.

In Toronto, she became friends with the owner of a costume shop near her home and was offered a job to supplement her meagre income. There, she met people in the film and television industry and soon Nagai reinvented herself into the world of costume design.

Film and television contracts provided steady work for 20 years. She enjoyed the work and met interesting people but 12-14-hour days, early morning calls, and late-night wraps, began to take their toll. Nagai reinvented herself again – leaving the world of urban Toronto, and in 2007, moved to the rural life of Haliburton Highlands.

To get involved in her new community, Nagai entered a video contest, 48-Create. Her two daughters, then ages nine and 11, enjoyed the family event, but when Nagai picked up the camera, she knew immediately what her next reinvention would be. Years as a costume designer developed a sense of what cinematographers wanted and the video experience made Nagai realize video creation was what she wanted. She began doing archival projects, remotely creating video content for IT professionals and working with local Sticks and Stones productions.

Through her new career, Nagai was introduced to the wider arts community. She soon became involved in many organizations, volunteering with Those Other Movies and dusting off her clarinet to join the Highlands Wind Symphony and Swing Band. She also learned best practices on conserving the beautiful nature area she now calls home through involvement with the Haliburton Highlands Land Trust.

Initially, Nagai missed the wide variety of ethnic foods available in multicultural Toronto, but she solved that dilemma by learning to make her favourite dishes herself. She admits it took some time to get used to businesses closing early in the Highlands, but she quickly adapted to the lack of traffic and quiet nature hikes.

Her daughters, now adults, have returned to Toronto to invent their own careers, but Nagai is satisfied with how her life has transformed and she has no plans to leave the Highlands.

School's Cool returns

By Lisa Gervais

After initially facing cancellation for 2026, SIRCH Community Services says its long-running School's Cool program will go ahead this summer - thanks to the generosity of community donors and partners.

SIRCH said support from CIBC, the County of Haliburton, and individual donors has made it possible to bring the program back.

For more than 25 years, School's Cool has supported children in Haliburton County who may need a little extra help before entering Junior Kindergarten. This year's program will take place at Stuart Baker Elementary School, where a kindergarten classroom has been generously made available.

Up to 21 children will be accepted, with a focus on four-year-olds entering JK this fall who may be experiencing developmental delays or challenges with speech and language, difficulty with social interaction, or low confidence in group settings.

Delivered over six weeks in a small, structured classroom environment, the program focuses on building language, early literacy and numeracy, social skills, emotional regulation, and independence.

"Just as importantly, it helps children feel comfortable, capable, and excited about going to school," SIRCH said.

The organization added participants typically gain close to a full year of developmental growth—a shift that can change not only how they start school, but how they experience learning moving forward.

Families who are accepted will be contacted by program coordinator Paula White, a retired principal with years of kindergarten experience, who will guide them through the next steps.

SIRCH is also hiring one lead instructor and two additional instructors with backgrounds in teaching, early childhood education, or educational assistance.

Applications are now open. The program will run from July 6 to August 13. The parent fee is $5 per day.

Wild Honey Hoedown kicks off spring

The annual Spring Johnny Burke Foundation Fundraiser was held at the Haliburton Legion April 26. Wild Honey Hoedown featured the best in country music including Jamie Oliver, Christine Vaillancourt, and Scott McGregor, backed by a band consisting of Steve Piticco on lead, Doug Johnson on steel, Wayne Ferguson on fiddle, Monty Flindall on drums and more. Proceeds are in support of the foundation. The primary intention of the foundation is to be an ally for the #notinmycity initiative, which aims to prevent, disrupt and end sexual exploitation and human trafficking. Secondly, the foundation provides a yearly, financial, one-time grant, to a youth in the country music field who meets the requirements set forth by the board of directors and voted upon. Lastly, the foundation gives $1,000 a year to the Rogersville Country Festival, in New Brunswick, to help hire acts (Lisa Gervais).

Lest we forget

Remembrance was front and centre on a special night at the Haliburton Legion April 24. The local branch welcomed people for its 2026 student awards celebration, commemorating youth who participated in this year's Remembrance Day literary and poster contests. The tradition has been running for more than 20 years, encouraging students from Stuart Baker and J.D. Hodgson elementary schools and Haliburton Highlands Secondary School to honour the sacrifices of Canadian veterans through personalized works. Legion member Carolyn Millard again organized this year's event. (Lisa Gervais)

Bottom right: June & Hadley Judson won in several categories at Legion level, and went on to Zone. ADVERTORIAL

The wintergreen on the shoreline

By Simon Payn

I made my first visit to a client's cottage last week. There were still drifts of snow piled up by the plow. But I'm ready for spring to be here.

Rufus, my dog, was ready, too. The ice was out so he had a muddy splash in the lake.

We were looking at my client's shoreline. As I always do, I glanced down at what was there already. Not much, of course, it was still April.

But beneath the cedars and spruces, I saw what I thought was the tiny leaves of wintergreen.

I picked one of the leaves and handed it to one of my clients. She crushed it, smelled it and passed it to her partner. Yes indeed. Wintergreen.

Most of my client's shoreline was natural – thick, layered vegetation.

The cottage was surrounded by water on three sides with liminal, partly wet, partly dry areas where the water ebbed and flowed. By these grew meadowsweet, blue flag iris, and lowbush blueberry. Further inland was mainly coniferous forest – cedar, hemlock, and spruce.

The only part without much vegetation was near their firepit. They simply wanted that final patch to be naturalized, too.

> The shoreline becomes a line on a spreadsheet. The plants and the water are variables in a mortgage calculation. You're standing apart from the land, not being part of it.

Healthy shorelines

A vegetated buffer keeps the lake healthy because it slows run-off and helps prevent erosion.

A natural shoreline also helps cottage prices. A study in 2014 found buyers pay about 2% more for each foot of Secchi disc measurements – the standard test to measure water clarity. A healthy shoreline is part of what keeps the lake clear.

This number keeps popping up in my head. I've even mentioned it to clients. I've written about it on my website. Once you know this number, you can't unknow it.

And that's a problem because it does something to your relationship with your land and the lake.

The shoreline becomes a line on a spreadsheet. The plants and the water are variables in a mortgage calculation.

You're standing apart from the land, not being part of it.

But somewhere in the back of my mind, hopeful green leaves and the unmistakable scent of wintergreen linger.

Seeing

We're often encouraged to help the environment because it's good for us. Being in nature makes us healthier and happier. A natural garden means we spend less on gas and fewer precious weekend hours mowing the lawn. A clean, healthy lake helps make our cottages worth more.

All these are true. But I can't help but notice what it does to me when I think this way. I'm removed from the land I live in. Somehow less human, like I'm separate from the grass and the rocks, not part of them.

I'm seeing the world through my thoughts, which means I fail to notice the layers of sedges, the fallen pine cones and, yes, the tiny leaves of wintergreen.

It wasn't like that last week. That afternoon I stood on the shoreline and felt the first rays of spring warmth after a long, snowy winter. The moss was squishy where it had soaked up the spring runoff. The hollow ground of roots and needles had the comforting scent of my childhood weekends amid the pine forests of eastern England. And Rufus, muddy and noisy, was splashing in the water and pulling at fallen sticks.

These are the times when I feel human, part of the world.

I think the cottage owners felt it, too.

I'll be adding more wintergreen to that shoreline this summer.

Home of the Highland Storm

U18 Rep Haliburton Timber Mart

The team had a strong and competitive season, showing growth, resilience, and commitment from start to finish.

Our roster this year included goaltenders: Nolan Taylor and Ethan Patterson; defensemen Zach Prentice, Matt Scheffee, Evan Shee, Evan Jones, and Parker Simms; and forwards Brody Hartwig, Caleb Manning, Josh Scheffee, Jace Mills, Chace Comer, Deagan Davison, Lucas Peelow, Jack Tomlinson, Luke Gruppe, Jacob Lawrence, and Mason Gibson.

The team battled hard all season and earned a spot in the Victoria Durham League finals against the Newcastle Stars. The best-of-three series was a hard-fought matchup that ultimately went to a decisive game three. In a tightly-contested game, the Storm came up just short, losing in overtime and narrowly missing the opportunity to advance to the Red Hat Tournament. Despite the outcome, the team showed tremendous determination and represented the association with pride.

I would like to extend a special congratulations to our graduating players: Mills, Simms, Jones, Manning, Patterson, Shee, Lawrence, and Scheffee. Your leadership and dedication have been invaluable to this team, and you have set a strong example for the younger players coming up through the program.

A special thank you as well to our affiliated player, Austin Latanville, who was a big help to our team during the playoffs.

I would also like to recognize the efforts of our bench staff—Zach Morissette, Ethan Glecoff, Tyler Martin, and Shawn Walker—whose time and commitment were instrumental to the team's success this season.

Overall, this group competed hard, supported one another, and made it an enjoyable and rewarding season. I'm proud of everything they accomplished. (Submitted by head coach Joe Boice)

U18 LL A&W

The Highland Storm A&W U18 LL team finished their season off strong, securing the Three County "B" division championship on home ice in Minden in front of their families and friends.

Although the team had a slow start to their year, they managed to finish fifth overall with an 11-7-4 record in the regular season. The team participated in three tournaments throughout the year in Bradford, Norwood and our home ice Silver Stick. With discipline and determination, the team was able to overcome challenges together and proved to themselves how hard work pays off. Most importantly, this team was thankful for the opportunity to have all our family members together to watch our final victory of the season.

Our U18 team would like to say a final thank you to all of the sponsors, but particularly A&W Haliburton, for supporting minor hockey in our community. To our local arena staff, who are always so helpful and cheer us on too; while making sure the ice surface and facilities are ready for us to use. To the referees, for giving our kids the opportunity to play games where they can showcase the skills that are developed during the long hours of practice throughout the season. To the timekeepers, especially Diane Peacock, whose unwavering dedication and support to our association will be greatly missed as she is retiring this season. And to our local Highland Storm executive for their time and dedication to ensure that our kids can continue to play a sport they love, right here at home. (Submitted)

'Light and love': mystic market returns

By Adam Frisk
Local Journalism Initiative Reporter

For those looking to escape the daily grind of a typical Saturday, Castle Antiques will transform into a hub of healing and high energy May 2.

Andrew Nowell, owner of The Wicked Wizard's Wife, is hosting the second iteration of the mystic market, and this year's event serves a dual purpose: a grand opening for his permanent shop located within Castle Antiques and a massive expansion of the wellness market that first debuted in October.

"We're finding that there's a lot of followers within the Haliburton area. Those who are into energies and wellness, being able to kind of connect that way with the different people," Nowell explained of the market. "So it's become a little bit of a hub within what we're doing."

Interest in alternative wellness has grown in popularity in the Highlands, and Saturday's market will feature 27 vendors, that's up from the 19 who participated in the fall.

"It pulls everyone together, from Reiki and sound tuning... Ultimately, it's another fun avenue for the people of Haliburton," Nowell said.

The event will feature practitioners offering mediumship, tarot, and palm readings. Specialists in Reiki, sound healing, and massage, as well as local artisans selling unique items. Nowell, who performs readings himself, said the event is designed to be approachable, even for skeptics.

"I think people are looking for some alternatives to help with wellness and discover themselves," he explained. "The world seems to be a little bit toxic right now. People want to detoxify and start to feel good about their surroundings. Haliburton already promotes that with the lakes and trees; this is just another avenue for that escape."

The market runs from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and will feature a scheduled "soft stop" at 1 p.m. for a 20-minute collective sound healing session.

"Last October, everybody was booked solid," Nowell said. "This year we wanted to break it up to give everyone a chance to breathe, grab a bite, and reset."

While the event is expected to attract seasonal tourists, Nowell said that the market is designed to serve the year-round community. Data collected from a draw at the October event confirmed that a majority of participants were from within the County.

"I wanted something for the roots of Haliburton," Nowell said. "It's comforting for people to come in and realize, 'oh wait, I'm not the only one interested in this.' It's about meeting like-minded people."

Admission is free; however, individual sessions with psychics or wellness practitioners are booked on a first-come, first-served basis via on-site sign-up sheets.

Nowell indicated that he hopes to make the market a recurring event and is exploring the possibility of hosting future workshops and a community Halloween celebration later this year.

OBITUARIES

In Loving Memory of

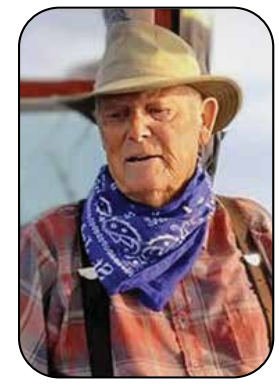
Donald "Don" Curry



CURRY, Donald "Don" - It is with love and sadness that we share the news of the passing of Don on Monday, December 1, 2025 at the age of 96 1/2.

Beloved husband and best friend of the late Elizabeth "Betty" (2006) for over 57 years. They built a family grounded in love. Cherished and adored by his son Clifford (Martine) and daughter Cathy Osgood (Peter). Devoted grandpa of Matthew (Colleen), Jennifer (Shawn Jefferson) and Jessica (Zac Wrobel). Great Grandfather of Quinn and Claire Jefferson, Ava and Brynn Curry and Rylie Wrobel.

Dad came from a large and loving family consisting of eight siblings in the beautiful village of Haliburton. Brother of the late George (2005) and Terry, late Gwen (2018) and Joe, late Millie (2023) and Ernie, late Russell (2002) and Faye, late Lloyd (2025) and Louise, late Ruth (2021) and Les, and Jack (2025). He will be fondly remembered by his many nieces and nephews.

Dad and mom spent most of their years together in Sudbury (Gatchell). Where dad was a long-time employee of Inco, and a proud volunteer firefighter. They spent many summers at the camp at Ratter Lake and those classic Labour Day get togethers. They later spent their retirement divided between Haliburton, Manitoulin Island and Arizona.

Dad was very proud to tell you that he was retired longer than he worked.

Dad made friends everywhere he went with his smile and quick wit and the best hugs. He always said he would live to be 102 then get shot by a jealous husband...thank goodness that did not happen.

Dad and mom spent their summers on Manitoulin Island sharing adventures and stories and countless times seeing beloved deer with their grandkids whom they adored.

Dad's legacy will live on in the countless lives he touched.

He will be missed by his cherished friends Roy and Maureen Hannah, Tracey, Brent, and Jennifer. The Hannah's were like family. Deanna Rosenberg who kept dad in line and on standby to book his appointment and any other task of which he could think.

The staff of F.J. Davey Home in Sault Ste. Marie, where do we begin to thank each of you for the unconditional love that you gave to our dad. You are all truly angels in disguise.
